ETHNO WANK

As another year stumbles to its grimy end and the many-headed media beast orders the hungry masses to cough up, consume, excrete; cough up, consume, excrete, Notion implores you to re-wind that salivating tongue and re-wire that addled brain for at least the time it takes for you to devour these pages. Fashion designer Gary Harvey swaps luxury fabric for laundry bags in his recycled couture; how to swap standard gifts for charitable offerings; what Europe can learn from the African arts; Emory Douglas paints a thousand words with his Black Panther Party posters; the best and worst ways to blow £12,000... Roll up, roll up!

HEEL THE WORLD

Bespoke shoe designer Hetty Rose makes sure her designs are sustainable by re-working unwanted material to adorn uppers and heels. Hand-made to fit the lady in luck, the materials selected to make the shoes are 'primarily vintage Japanese kimono fabrics - relics of a disappearing world, saturated in significance and hidden meanings.' Wowza. Thus discarded fragments snap back with fresh life – antique fabrics tread pavements, decorate dancefloors in whole new worlds...
